

BUSH HERITAGE AUSTRALIA

Trio of top Australian scientists to headline SOLD OUT Women for the Environment Breakfast in Sydney

Bush Heritage Australia is proud to announce its inaugural Women for the Environment Breakfast in Sydney in September. The event will be held at Deutsche Bank Place, Sydney from 7am – 9am on Thursday 6 September and is now SOLD OUT.

However, the public can still be part of the event, with a Facebook Live stream of the panel discussion via Bush Heritage's Facebook page from 7:20am onwards:

or via our Twitter feed @BushHeritageAus

The event follows on from seven successful Women in Conservation breakfast events in Melbourne which have been held in partnership with Bush Heritage and Trust for Nature annually since 2011.

The format will be a breakfast panel discussion, investigating the critical environmental issues of our time, and the key role women are playing in solving them. On the panel are:

- Dr Rebecca Spindler
Rebecca is Bush Heritage's Executive Manager of Science and Conservation. An experienced conservation scientist with more than 20 years in the field, she was the Manager of Research and Conservation at Taronga Zoo and has managed science programs in China, Brazil and the US.

- Dr Sally Box
Sally is Australia's second Threatened Species Commissioner, a role she was appointed to in 2017.
- Professor Michelle Leishman
Michelle is a Distinguished Professor in Biological Sciences at Macquarie University, and her research interests include invasive plants, vegetation responses to climate change and urban green space

The panel moderator is Dr Ann Jones, presenter of the ABC's popular nature program Off Track. Ann is an experienced journalist and nature lover with a PhD in History, who travels around the country to document wildlife stories.

ANZ is a proud sponsor of the breakfast.

Tickets are $65 per person or $500 for a table of nine, with all funds raised supporting Bush Heritage's vital conservation work across the country.
